5 AI Prompts That Save Business Owners 5 Hours This Week

By Ronnie Katz | AI Ron Clarity

Real prompts. Real time savings. No jargon required.

theaisanityplan.com

Hey — I'm Ronnie Katz.

I spent 40+ years in business, including two decades as a CPA. I've seen every productivity trend come and go — from Franklin Planners to Getting Things Done to apps that promise to "revolutionize your workflow" and then collect dust after a week.

AI is different. Not because it's magic — it's not. But because it's the first tool I've ever used that gets better the more specifically you tell it what you need. Kind of like a really talented intern who never sleeps and doesn't need health insurance.

Here's what I've learned after spending thousands of hours testing AI tools: most business owners are either not using AI at all, or they're using it like a search engine with extra steps. Both are leaving hours on the table every single week.

These 5 prompts are ones I actually use. They work in ChatGPT, Claude, or any major AI tool. Copy them, paste them, customize the parts in [brackets], and you're done.

One small caveat: AI tools change fast. These prompts work as of early 2026 with any major AI tool. If something shifts, the principles behind them still hold — and that's what really matters.

Let's save you some time.

PROMPT 01

The Weekly Priority Sorter

It's Monday morning. You've got a sticky note, three email threads, a text from a client, and a vague sense of dread about something due Thursday. Instead of spending 20 minutes trying to sort it all out in your head, let AI do the organizing.

THE PROMPT — Copy, paste, and customize the [brackets]:

I'm a [your role, e.g., small business owner / marketing consultant / financial advisor] and here's everything on my plate this week. I'm going to dump it all out — don't judge the mess:

[Paste your entire to-do list, brain dump, notes, emails — everything. Don't organize it first. That's the whole point.]

Now please:

1. Group these into categories (client work, admin, business development, personal, urgent fires)
2. Flag anything that looks time-sensitive or deadline-driven
3. Suggest a realistic priority order for tackling these, assuming I have about [X hours] of productive work time this week
4. Identify 2-3 things I could delegate, automate, or skip entirely

Keep it practical. I'm not looking for a motivational speech — just a clear plan I can actually follow.

WHY IT WORKS

This prompt succeeds because it gives AI your real context — your role, your actual tasks, and your available time. The "don't judge the mess" line gives you permission to be honest, which means AI gets better raw material. And the "delegate, automate, or skip" request? That's where the real time savings hide.

20 min of Monday planning

AI Ron Says: In The AI Sanity Plan, you'll learn the Clarity Prompt Formula — five elements that make every prompt 3x more effective. This prompt uses three of them. Imagine what all five can do.

PROMPT 02

The Client Email Rescue

You know what you want to say to a client. You just don't want to spend 15 minutes finding the right words, striking the right tone, and making sure you don't accidentally sound passive-aggressive. Give AI your bullet points and let it write the polished version.

THE PROMPT — Copy, paste, and customize the [brackets]:

Write a professional email to my client [client name or description, e.g., "a long-term accounting client" or "a new prospect who asked for a proposal"].

Here's the situation: [1-2 sentences of context, e.g., "They asked for a project update and I need to tell them we're a week behind schedule but still on budget."]

Key points I need to hit:

- [Point 1]
- [Point 2]
- [Point 3]

Tone: [Choose one: warm and reassuring / direct and professional / friendly but firm / apologetic but solution-focused]

Keep it under 200 words. I want it to sound like me — a real person, not a corporate robot. No "I hope this email finds you well."

WHY IT WORKS

The magic here is in the constraints. Telling AI the tone, the word limit, and what NOT to say prevents it from producing generic corporate mush. The bullet points give it structure without you having to write full sentences. And specifying "sound like me" pushes it away from that obvious AI voice we've all learned to spot.

15 min drafting & editing

30 seconds

AI Ron Recommends: The AI Sanity Plan includes 25 business email and communication templates — from difficult conversations to price increases to client offboarding. Each one is copy-paste ready. This prompt is the appetizer. The course is the full menu.

PROMPT 03

The Meeting Prep Brief

You've got a meeting in 30 minutes with someone you haven't spoken to in a while — or someone new. Instead of scrambling through LinkedIn and old emails, let AI build you a one-page brief so you walk in prepared and confident.

THE PROMPT — Copy, paste, and customize the [brackets]:

I have a meeting in [timeframe] with [person's name and title, e.g., "Sarah Chen, VP of Operations at Greenfield Manufacturing"].

Here's what I know about them:

- [Any context you have: how you met, last conversation, mutual connections, their company, etc.]

The purpose of this meeting is: [e.g., "exploring a potential partnership" / "quarterly check-in" / "they reached out about our services"]

Please create a short meeting prep brief that includes:

1. A quick summary of their company and what they do (if I gave you enough to work with)
2. 3 smart questions I could ask that show I've done my homework
3. 2-3 talking points relevant to the meeting purpose
4. Any potential concerns or objections they might raise, with suggested responses
5. A suggested opening line to start the conversation naturally

Keep the whole thing to one page. I want to glance at it 5 minutes before the meeting and feel ready.

WHY IT WORKS

Most people wing their meetings. The ones who prepare stand out immediately. This prompt combines what you already know (your context) with what AI can infer and organize. The "smart questions" piece is the secret weapon — it makes you look more prepared than you probably are.

25 min of research & prep

2 minutes

AI Ron Says: Module 4 of The AI Sanity Plan covers AI for client management and relationship building — including a full system for meeting prep, follow-ups, and client communication workflows. One prompt is good. A complete system is better.

PROMPT 04

The Document Summarizer

Someone just sent you a 30-page contract, a dense industry report, or a long article "you should really read." You don't have 45 minutes. You need the key points, the red flags, and the bottom line — fast.

THE PROMPT — Copy, paste, and customize the [brackets]:

I need you to summarize the following document for me. I'm a [your role] and I need to [what you're trying to decide or understand, e.g., "decide whether to sign this vendor agreement" / "prepare for a board meeting about this report"].

Here's the document:

[Paste the full text, or as much as the tool allows]

Please provide:

1. A 3-sentence executive summary (the "what do I really need to know" version)
2. The 5 most important points or findings
3. Any red flags, unusual terms, or things that seem off
4. Specific sections I should actually read word-for-word (cite the section or paragraph)
5. One question I should be asking about this document that I probably haven't thought of

Write this for a smart business person, not a lawyer or academic. Plain English.

WHY IT WORKS

The killer feature is telling AI why you're reading the document. "Summarize this" gives you a generic summary. "Summarize this so I can decide whether to sign" gives you a decision-focused summary. The "red flags" request means you're using AI to point you to the parts that matter, so you can apply your own judgment where it counts.

45 min of reading

4 minutes

AI Ron's Rule: AI summaries are a starting point, not a substitute for professional advice. The AI Sanity Plan dedicates an entire module to knowing when to trust AI and when to verify — including a simple quality checklist you'll use every single day.

PROMPT 05

The Social Media Month-Maker

You know you should be posting on social media. You have things to say. But sitting down and coming up with 30 days of post ideas feels like punishment. This prompt generates a full month of ideas tailored to your business in about 90 seconds.

THE PROMPT — Copy, paste, and customize the [brackets]:

I need a month of social media content ideas for my business.

About my business:

- Industry: [e.g., accounting firm / consulting practice / retail store / real estate]
- Target audience: [e.g., small business owners / first-time homebuyers / local families]
- Platforms I use: [e.g., LinkedIn and Instagram / Facebook only / all three]
- My brand voice is: [e.g., professional but approachable / educational / casual and fun]

Content I've posted recently that did well: [optional — mention 1-2 topics or posts that got good engagement]

Please create a 30-day content calendar with:

- A post idea for each day (just the concept, not the full post)
- A mix of content types: educational tips, behind-the-scenes, client wins (anonymized), industry news reactions, personal stories, and direct offers
- For each idea, note which platform it's best suited for
- Flag 4-5 posts that could be expanded into longer content (blog post, newsletter, video)
- Include 2-3 "engagement posts" designed to start conversations (polls, questions, hot takes)

Make the ideas specific to my industry — not generic "motivational Monday" filler.

WHY IT WORKS

The difference between this and asking AI to "give me social media ideas" is specificity. You're telling it your industry, your audience, your voice, and your platforms. The content type mix prevents the calendar from feeling repetitive. And the "expand into longer content" flag means you're getting a content strategy, not just a list.

2-3 hours of planning

5 minutes

AI Ron Recommends: The AI Sanity Plan includes platform-specific social media templates for LinkedIn, Instagram, and X — plus a complete content repurposing workflow that turns one idea into a week of posts. This prompt gives you the calendar. The course gives you the system.

What's Next?

These 5 prompts are just the beginning.

They'll save you real time this week — probably 5 hours if you use all of them. But here's what they can't do: they can't teach you why they work, how to modify them when your situation changes, or how to build your own from scratch for any business task you'll ever face.

That's what The AI Sanity Plan is for.

- 30+ copy-paste templates — covering emails, proposals, client management, hiring, financial analysis, content creation, and more
- The Clarity Prompt Formula — the five-element framework that makes every prompt dramatically more effective
- A complete quality checklist — so you know when to trust AI output and when to push back
- Industry-specific workflows — for professional services, retail, healthcare, real estate, and more
- A 90-day implementation plan — that turns "I should use AI more" into an actual system

Your AI Clarity Score showed you where you are.

The course shows you where to go.
